NatureShock: Moor Allure

For me, the idea of a moor brings to mind the foggy British landscapes of Charlotte Bronte's brooding gothic novel Jane Eyre. But those mossy, ancient reserves of nutrient-rich plants and herbs known as moors exist not only in the U.K., but also right here in my home and native land of Canada.

Natural skincare line Moor Allure taps the antioxidant and vitamin potential of moor extract sourced from an ancient sedge grass peat moor to nourish and protect the skin. Now lovelies, I'll admit that the notion of putting what is, essentially, dirt on my face was at first tough to swallow, but after putting the products to the test, I'm now a believer. Made from 99% natural ingredients such as sweet almond oil, cocoa and shea butters and vegetable oils, you know you're getting the real deal here. I'm loving the Purifying Facial Cleanser, an olive and coconut-oil-infused bar that deeply cleanses without drying. With my oily skin, I love its major frothing action because I feel like it's really doing the job of refreshing my skin. And the Soothing Herbal Toner is also a treat; spritzing it on after cleansing, my pores feel tightened yet nourished. My favorite of the line has to be the Radiance Mask. It looked a bit like mud when I slathered it on, but after only two minutes, my skin looked rejuvenated and radiant. Looks like mud is my new BFF.
